1500: Progressive Spirit: Podcaster's website ; Underwriter website Did Jesus fulfill prophecy? The gospels certainly wanted early Christians to think that. That argument is made today in many evangelical circles. But does it hold water? Religious scholar, Robert J. Miller, says that it is time for Christians to retire the argument from prophecy. He shows how the gospel writers manipulated prophecies by taking them out of context, changing them, inventing them, and even creating fictional narratives about Jesus based on them to show that Jesus fulfilled prophecy. Miller shows that the New Testament writers helped Jesus fulfill prophecy in order to prove that Christians replaced Jews as Gods people. According to Miller, the argument from prophecy is circular, not convincing, and unnecessary. It also has left a long legacy of antisemitism. Robert J. Miller is Rosenberger Professor of Religious Studies and Christian Thought at Juniata College in Pennsylvania. He is the author of "The Jesus Seminar and Its Critics" and "Born Divine: The Births of Jesus and Other Sons of God." He is also editor of "The Complete Gospels (Fourth Edition)." His latest book that we will discuss today is called "Helping Jesus Fulfill Prophecy." Archive 08-24-2017

1900: Peace Talks Radio: The Series on Peacemaking and Nonviolent Conflict Resolution: Podcaster's website ; Underwriter website In public discussions of racial violence, the focus is often on people of color and the way they experience racism. In this episode of Peace Talks Radio, our guests turn the lens on Whiteness, asking how the notion of Whiteness came to be, how it has shaped American history and how it perpetuates injustice in interpersonal interactions and systems in American society today. We talk with John Biewen, audio director at the Center for Documentary Studies at Duke University, who produced the 2017 series Seeing White for his podcast Scene On Radio. The fourteen-part documentary audio series takes a deep dive into the history of Whiteness as a tool used to oppress people of color. Then we speak with Cheryl E. Matias, Ph.D., an associate professor at the University of Colorado Denver School of Education and Human Development. Matias, a woman of color, teaches mostly white teacher-candidates who often have the well-intentioned goal of teaching students of color in urban schools. Her book, "Feeling White", details how her students strong negative emotional reactions often derail important conversations about race, and offers lessons on how to work through those emotionalities of Whiteness in order to have more productive dialogue. Well also hear excerpts from an October 2018 workshop entitled What Is Whiteness? taught by educator and anti-racism activist Frida Miles at the Albuquerque Center for Peace and Justice. Hannah Colton hosts. Archive 01-21-2019
