1100: The Thomas Jefferson Hour: Thomas Jefferson is interpreted by Clay S. Jenkinson. Even Jefferson made a few mistakes, and although he might've had a hard time admitting them during his lifetime, it costs us nothing to look at them in retrospect from 200 years. Clay made a list, and it comes to about eight. We had: criticizing Washington, attacking Hamilton, the Kentucky Resolutions, demanding papers in the XYZ Affair, the Embargo Acts " when Jefferson thought better of the American people's patience than was actually the case " and believing that the French Revolution would come out harmoniously. Jefferson actually doctored some of his early correspondence to make himself look less naive on the bloodbath of the reign of terror. 1400: Conversation Earth: Robust economic growth has become the Holy Grail of public policy and politics. But some economists and many scientists have come to believe growth has become uneconomic." Former World Bank Senior Economist Herman Daly explains this in terms we can all understand. Daly co-founded the journal, Ecological Economics, and has written and spoken extensively about the fact that the economy is a sub-system of a larger system. The larger system being the biosphere " the environment. In this newly released 2010 interview, Herman Daly postulates that, in a full world, the costs of further economic growth exceed the benefits, and we are reaching a point where it is physically impossible to keep growing the global economy. Using easy to understand, real-world examples, Daly delivers an aha moment. After listening to this interview, one is likely to conclude, Of course! Its the environment, stupid! 1430: Conversation Earth: Do we behave rationally? You might be surprised how often our decision-making deviates from what is in our best interest. Behavioral economist Dan Ariely studies human behavior and decision-making. His experiments have led him to startling conclusions. We repeatedly and predictably make the wrong decisions in many aspects of our lives. We may be rats in a maze for scientific study, but Dan Ariely puts a refreshingly human face on the scientific study of why we do the things we do.He offers an insightful explanation of why Republicans and Democrats in the U.S. can't agree on facts. When we have an initial belief, reality doesn't matter as much as we think. We have an illusion that we're actually observing reality, but it's filtered dramatically by what we're experiencing in our brains, and our expectations. Ariely offered this about climate change: If you were starting from scratch, and you said, Let me create a problem that people would not care about, it would look very much like global warming.
